Fieldwork methodology: In field conditions, the environment often changes from day to day. Measurements of the same place, therefore, may not be possible in separate experiments (e.g., before and after rain), and the time of observation is an important factor in the field situation.

These two findings suggest that women's perceptions of their own self-regulatory and decision-making abilities are related to their use of the program. The women perceived that their self-regulatory and decision-making abilities were related to their use of the program. The women perceived that their self-regulatory and decision-making abilities were related to their use of the program.
